The general symbol for an Bnnacardioid is C , and we shall use throughout this paper the corresponding symbol C for the Pehtacardioid. The system of coordinates and the general method of analysis which will be employed are those described in 1 of Professor Morleys Memoir on Reflexive Geometry. However, as the notation in the various articles on this and allied subjects varies considerably, I shall, in order to avoid confusion, here state briefly the symbolism I intend to follow. The conjugate of a complex number x will be represented by the letter y , and the conjugate of a , by h . A complex number of absolute value equal to unity is called a turn and will in general be denoted by the letter or by a Greek letter; the conjugate of a turn being its reciprocal needs no special notation. There are certain special turns to which definite symbols have already been assigned, and these I shall retain; they are the following: The...
