Jour. Iron and Steel Inst., No. 2, 1899. total carbon, must consist of pearlite with ferrite, while those above 1 per cent. consist of pearlite, with quantities of cementite, increasing with the carbon. The results obtained appear to indicate that there are several different carbides existing in steels, and that these carbides have different molecular weights. According to this view, the formula  $\text{Fe}_3\text{C}$  is merely an empirical one. The hypothesis offered by Campbell makes the fundamental assumption that carbon forms with iron a series of compounds that might be termed ferro-carbons on account of their similarity to hydro-carbons. This series of ferroc carbons has the empirical formula  $\text{C Fe}_3$  . In annealed steels containing less than 0.89 per cent. of carbon we should find the eutectic pearlite to consist of alternate laminae of  $\text{C Fe}_3$  and ferrite  $\text{Fe}_{21}$  . The latter may be regarded as iron of crystallisation, the ferro-carbons occurring in pearlite having a higher molecular weight than those occurring as free cementite. When steel is heated above a certain temperature the ferro-carbons dissolve in the iron of crystallisation forming martensite, which may be represented by the formula  $\text{C Fe}_8 + \text{Fe}_{21}$ , or, according to Arnold,...
