Excerpt: . CHAPTER V THE DECLINE OF THE FAMILY The religion of the family will gradually die out as the religion of the State becomes more and more absorbing.--The power of the head of the family was anciently autocratic over the lives, property, and self-respect of the members.--The right of private war or of the blood-feud has been abolished.--The rights of fathers and husbands over the lives of children and wives have been abolished, or nearly so.--The ancient rule of secular legislation, which the Churches have copied, was that marriage was indissoluble.--The State has done its best to maintain this principle down to quite recent times.--Christianity, however, has made this important change, that it does not tolerate the libertinage which was the old compensation for the restrictions of marriage.--The old marriage of suitability was not more mercenary in its essence than the marriage of inclination....
